To whom it may concern

Peter Jones started helping me with mentorship in 2013. This was during a period of significant personal challenge in my life and I am very grateful to him for his consistent support throughout the last few years.

Peter is a very energized person. He is extremely positive and goal driven. Despite the difficulties that may present themselves, Peter is someone who believes in the events of life as opportunities. Peter believes in self-improvement and never settling for where one is at present. He inspired me to better myself at times when I thought I was good enough. He showed me that there is always another level up.

Peter is a good mentor in my opinion. The reasons for this are the following:

Peter never criticizes or judges a person's actions. He realizes that we are all human and have our faults. He also realizes that as human beings we have limitations and that we should accept them and work with them effectively.

Peter is practically minded. He believes in making things happen; not merely thinking about plans. He is a doer and leads by example. I find it inspiring to watch him never sitting idle. He is always planning and/or working towards a new goal. He is motivated and determined.

Peter believes in the youth of South Africa. He believes there is a lot of untapped potential in our country and that with the right skills training he can help people become very productive members of society. I appreciate his spirit as Peter is not selfish, but wants to impart knowledge and skills to others in order to help them be more successful in their lives.

Peter is creative and very resourceful. He has taught me how to use what's around me to my advantage. He is great at showing people how they can improve where they are and by using what they already have. He is a master at leveraging resources. Thus working with him is an easy process.

Peter believes in well rounded individuals. The skills he teaches are often focused around promoting well being rather than being solely focused on financial success for example. He has given me good advice on how to look after myself and thereby place myself in the best position to achieve my objectives.

I highly recommend Peter as someone who has excellent skills in project management and mentorship and would consider anyone who could contract his services very fortunate.

Yours sincerely
